I again purpose in 1907, as in 1906, asking for more of these engines. 11th Class.--These engines have proved satisfactory. The opening of the WitbankBrakpan section rendered necessary the transfer of several of these from Pretoria to Gerniistou. Fome of this class are now out of service temporarily, as there is insufficient work for them on those sections of the line built or strengthened to admit of their use. This has to a great extent been brought about by the shorter mileage from Johannesburg to Witbank and the easier grade on the new line. B Class--These are mainly employed on the Rand tram on local passenger servicealso as shunting engines; but should be replaced on passenger work by an improved and larger double-bogied tank engine, the general design of which I have had drawn out for some months. I am again including a number of engines of the new design in my 1907 requirements, and I look upon the necessity for these engines as one of very great urgency. D Class.--These engines are used for local passenger service, and for moderate loads are doing good work. They do not, however, possess the power for satisfactorily working heavy suburban trains, and the new engines which have been mentioned as necessary to replace the B class will also replace these later on. These engines can then be put on to branch line work. E Class (Reid Engines).--Owing to the slackness of...
