Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: .turn his attention to modern tendencies and RECONSTRUCTION, with which the last chapter will deal. - From an article on Three Doctrines in Conflict, in The Round Table for March 1919. CHAPTER IV THE FUNDAMENTALS OF CITIZENSHIP No citizen can escape the influences by which all mankind is affected, and three main ones operate: heredity, environment, occupation. Every child is equipped with certain qualities derived from its parents or remoter ancestors; these qualities may or may not be fully developed during the child s life, but they will to some extent colour that existence. By heredity is here meant, however, more than parental inheritance, for we live in a world loaded with legacies, and the phrase heir of all the ages is true of heredity in its social sense. The legacies of custom and moral standards are inherited by each new life, whatever its individual qualities; atmosphere of thought and even range of feeling are formed during the ages, through the legacies bequeathed to us by scientists, poets, artists, and philosophers; the very aspect of the earth is changed for the new citizen through the work of hands living before him, by the building of cities, of mighty temples and cathedrals, of great monuments, bridges, towers, and factories. A citizen born after the Parthenon was built began his career with a far different inheritance from one born a century before, just as one beginning life on earth after the establishment of railway trains would differ from...
